Description Rato is a Sans Serif west-body family designed in the summer of 2010, which warsaw-based designer Lukasz Dziedzic expanded in the summer of 2013 (Rato means Polish summer). It carefully tries to balance some potentially conflicting priorities: it will look very transparent when used in body text, but will show some original characteristics when used in larger sizes. Classical proportions, especially in capital letters, provide familiar harmony and elegance. At the same time, the sleek sans serif look makes it clear that Rato was designed in 2010. The semi-round detail of the letter gives Rato warmth, while the strong structure provides stability and seriousness. In 2013-2014, the family expanded significantly to cover more than 2300 glyphs per style. It currently supports more than 100 Latin-based languages, more than 50 Cyrillic-based languages, Greek, and IPA phonetics.
